INSIDE - OUTSIDE

Richard Rogers's is known for his brilliant inside-outside design that is highly evolutionary with well defined functional objectives.

Richard Rogers is a renowned Italian-British architect noted for his modernist and functionalist designs in high-tech architecture. He was born in Florence (Tuscany) into an Anglo-Italian family and later settled in Trieste, Milan and Florence and then in England. After attending the Architectural Association in London, Rogers studied in the United States at Yale University, where he met fellow Brit Norman Foster. After graduating, the two architects joined forces with Su Brumwell and Wendy Cheeseman to form Team 4 in 1963. During this period, individually and with the group, Rogers designed a series of private houses and residential complexes, including a house made of plastic, created with his wife, and his own property in Wimbledon in steel and synthetic materials. However, it was the industrial buildings in Swindon (1966) that marked a turning point in Rogers' and Foster's careers.
